ROOSEVELT FEARS HUGHES AS RIVAL FOR PRESIDENCY

Fellow Voyagers to Europe Gain Impression He Hopes to Be Republican Nominee.

WARM GREETING IN PARIS

President Poincare Sends Private Car and Officials Who Meet Him at Cherbourg.

By Associated Press.
PARIS, June 6.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt was the guest of honor today at a luncheon given by Gabriel Hanotaux, former Minister of Foreign Affairs, who brought together to meet the former President of the United States a number of distinguished persons.
Among them were Alexander Ribot who has been three French Premier; Gen. Henri J. Brugere, who visited the United States on a mission for the French Government during Roosevelt's presidency; Gen. Charles Mangin, who has recently done brilliant military service in Morocco; Henri Baudan, the historian; Emile Boutroux, the philosopher and academician; Louis Jarry, secretary of the Franco-American committee; Dr. Gustave Le Bon, Count d'Haussonville, Ambassador Myron T. Herrick and Robert Woods Bliss, secretary of the American Embassy in Paris.

Roosevelt Pleased With Welcome Extended in England.

PLYMOUTH, England, June 6.—Col. Roosevelt was met on his arrival here yesterday by Arthur Lee, Civil Lord of the Admiralty in the last administration, his host on a former visit to England, and with whom he stays in London this time. Others who greeted the Colonel were the Mayor of Plymouth, Alderman Tom Baker and Mr. Wallis, chairman of the Chamber of Commerce. All boarded the liner and extended a welcome to Col. Roosevelt, who was visibly pleased. The Mayor reminded him of Plymouth's historic connection with America.

Col. Roosevelt replied: "No American can possibly visit Plymouth without absolutely visualizing Drake."
Passenger Tells of Trip.
A fellow traveler who saw much of Roosevelt during the trip gave the following particulars:
The former President appeared at dinner only on the first day when he sat at the Captain's table. It was his practice during the voyage, which was remarkably fine, the winds being chiefly from the northwest and southwest, to go around the deck, walking one hour daily. He saw on these promenades various people he knew and talked with them, among the number being Bishop John Gardiner Murray and Mr. Kennedy, a banker of Maryland, and J. A. Stewart, and a Mr. Durant of Philadelphia. He talked politics a great deal but was always in strictly private conversation.

Those who talked with the Colonel on the voyage got the impression that his ambitions still are to enter the presidential contest two years hence. He gave everyone with whom he talked the impression that it would be as leader of the Republican party that he would run, as the Progressive party was on the wane. He also struck people as being more careful in what he said than he used to be. He seemed to speak in terms of repression and with great caution.

Col. Roosevelt, judged by his appearance and actions, maintains his vigor and still is possessed of his old self-confidence and optimism. The only impression that Roosevelt appears to fear is the presidential campaign, those who talked with him believe, is United States Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes, formerly Governor of New York. The Colonel realizes, his listeners are convinced, that the hunt for the nomination will be a still one and he is determined to do nothing to arouse the antagonism of the rank and file of the Republican party. In other words, he is out to win.

The presence of a military attaché, Miss Strachey, who embarked at Plymouth on the Olympic, caused some anxiety to the police, but she did not bother Col. Roosevelt.
President Poincare's Private Car Meets Roosevelt at Cherbourg.
CHERBOURG, France, June 6.—Col. Roosevelt arrived here last night on board the steamer Olympic on his mission to attend the wedding of his son, Kermit Roosevelt, to Miss Belle Wyatt Willard. After he was officially welcomed on behalf of the French Government, he departed at midnight for Paris.

The private car of President Poincare was sent to Cherbourg for the use of the former American executive and M. Hanotaux, assistant Prefect of Cherbourg, came delegated to welcome him. Col. Roosevelt was greatly pleased at his reception. He was the object of the interest of passengers as he stepped briskly over the gangplank from the steamer. Col. Roosevelt declared that the sea voyage had greatly benefited him and that he never felt better in his life. He appeared to be in the best of health.

The case he carried on board the Olympic at New York had been cleaned when he came ashore. He said he had cleaned in weight since he left the United States and hoped that after his European trip he would be entirely recovered from the illness contracted in the jungles of South America.

It looks like a second division for the trusts.

"I wonder if they'll light on the match trust," said Riggs.

"Probably they'll hit a cold trail if they get after the ice trust."

"But they ought to find the butter trust pretty soft at this time of year."

"And the Apple trust will be a hard nut to crack."

"I hope they'll get them all."

"Let us trust they will."

The official forecast for St. Louis and vicinity: Unsettled weather to-night and Sunday, probably with local showers and thunderstorms, not much change in temperature.

WRECK FREES CHICKENS AND NEGROES DINE HIGH

Car Hits Wagon, Crates Are Smashed and Dozen Fowls Disappear.

There will be several chicken dinners to delight the palates of the negroes in the neighborhood of Fourteenth and Pine streets as a result of a street car accident there Thursday.

A Bellefontaine car sideswiped a United States Express Co. wagon on which were five crates of chickens. The crates were thrown into the street and several broken open. The negroes arose to the occasion and showed Louis Migre, the driver of the wagon, that "a white man can't catch a chicken, no-how."

Stout black ladies showed marvelous agility in scrambling choice pullets under their aprons and doing the wifishon slide. Migre captured some of his chickens, but about a dozen were unaccounted for when the chase was over.

"BILLY" SUNDAY SINGER LOSES $20,000 VERDICT

Miss Georgia Jay Wins Breach of Promise Suit Against Homer Rodeheaver.

CHICAGO, June 6.—A verdict awarding $20,000 damages to Miss Georgia Jay against Homer Rodeheaver, choirmaster for "Billy" Sunday, evangelist, for breach of promise to marry, was returned today by a jury at the Circuit Court.

Miss Jay alleged that she met Rodeheaver in Iowa; that they became friends and that he proposed marriage to her and was accepted. Later she declared he refused to marry her because marriage would interfere with his career.

Evidence was presented showing that Rodeheaver received $100 a week and traveling expenses.

HINDU BECOMES CITIZEN

University Graduate Is Fourth of Race to Get Papers.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 6.—Tarak Nath Das, a Hindu post-graduate student at the University of California, was admitted yesterday to citizenship. He is the fourth of his race to become an American citizen.

Das is a graduate of the University of Washington and chairman of the committee in charge of the World's student conference, to be held at the Panama-Pacific exposition in 1915. He was a delegate to the Lake Mohonk peace conference on international arbitration.

Swamped 'em all again for the 46th time this year.

On both Thursday and Friday of this week the POST-DISPATCH completely swamped all four of its competitors in the volume of legitimate display advertising carried from our home merchants.

In other words, on Thursday these merchants bought 91 columns in the POST-DISPATCH alone and only 87 columns in the Globe-Democrat, Republic, Times and Star, all four of the other city papers, added together.

On the very next day, Friday, these merchants bought 85 columns of space in the POST-DISPATCH alone and only 84 columns in all four of the other papers added together.

The records of these two days are not unusual, for the POST-DISPATCH has on each of 46 days thus far this year, without special effort of any kind, carried as much or more advertising from its home merchants than all four of its competitors, the Globe, Republic, Times and Star, added together. This relatively large volume of business comes to the POST-DISPATCH solely because the merchants have found its pulling power to be greater than that of all the other St. Louis papers combined.

COPPINGER TELLS OF VISIT TO HOME OF MRS. MACKINAW

Her Statement on Stand of Time He Was There Is Corroborated by Two Neighbors.

HILLSKOTTER'S STORY

Part of Statement of Judge, Who Is Sued for $20,000, Denied by Two Witnesses.

The case of Mrs. Emma B. Mackinaw of Edwardsville, Ill., wife of County Clerk Harry Mackinaw, who is suing County Judge John E. Hillskotter for $20,000 on a charge of slander, is expected to go to the jury late Saturday afternoon.

John B. Coppinger took the witness stand and denied that there had ever been anything improper in his relations with Mrs. Mackinaw, or that he had ever told Hillskotter there had been. He denied taking part in conversations in which he had been quoted by the Judge.

His story of a visit to Mrs. Mackinaw's home the evening of May 15, 1912, corroborated in every detail her own account. He was at a hotel with Judge Hillskotter, he said, when he got a telephone call from Mrs. Mackinaw asking him to come to her house. He went there and found her greatly disturbed, he said, by word from Alton, the driver of the Circuit Court car, for medical treatment, was in a critical condition.

Mrs. Mackinaw Sobbed.
She asked his advice about going to Chicago at once and asked him to take the keys to the office of her husband, the County Clerk, he said.

Coppinger, who is Clerk of the Probate Court, had an office near Mackinaw's.

As he was leaving the house he said he saw two men running. He thought one of them might have been Judge Hillskotter, because he wore what the witness described as a "white statesmanship hat." This remark caused laughter in the court, which drew a reprimand from Judge Crow.

Miss Mary McHenry of Alton testified that on the afternoon in question she had telephoned to Mrs. Mackinaw about the sick husband's condition.

At one time when Coppinger was asked about his relations with Mrs. Mackinaw, the plaintiff hid her face in her handkerchief and sobbed.

Hillskotter's testimony.
Two witnesses Friday denied that Judge Hillskotter had told them certain things about Mrs. Mackinaw. They were C. H. Spillman, an Edwardsville newspaper man, and John U. S. Bell, County Superintendent of Schools.

Earlier in the day Judge Hillskotter had taken the stand and in a very dramatic manner told the jury of conversations which he said he had had with them. Hillskotter introduced conversations alleged to have taken place between him and John B. Coppinger, Probate Court Clerk, whose name was linked with Mrs. Mackinaw's in the alleged slander. Hillskotter, on the stand, went into all detail of how he had told Spillman and Bell what he had seen, and what Coppinger had told him, and even demonstrated how Coppinger stood while telling him certain things.

Copy of Letter in Evidence.
But when the plaintiff called Uzzell and Spillman to the stand, they denied practically all that Hillskotter said he had told them. Spillman denied absolutely everything but a small portion of one sentence.

A copy of a letter, the original of which was introduced.

TAMPICO BLOCKADE NEW MENACE TO MEDIATION PLANS

Desire of U. S. to Keep Port Open May Interfere With Huerta's Plan to Close It.

SCHOONER LANDS ARMS

Mediators Said to Object to Constitutionalists Getting More War Munitions.

Villa Berates Huerta Daily by Telegraph.

PRESIDENT HUERTA is now in daily communication with Gen. Villa, according to a report brought here by refugees, but in a somewhat unconventional way.

Villa, according to report, recently sent one of his telegraphers "within the Federal lines. He tapped a wire and sent to Huerta a message in which Villa called his enemy various unpleasant names and urged him not to hasten from the capital as Villa was very anxious to see him. Villa requested Huerta to let his husband out of his room. I discovered him there with another woman. I did not recognize her, then, but I learned later that she was Mrs. Triplette."

In this connection she testified: "I really felt sorry for Mr. Squibb and I didn't like to think of his having all the unpleasant notoriety that the suit would bring. I have all the letters that my husband wrote to Mrs. Triplette while she was in Hot Springs. I got them to help him. Mrs. Triplette doesn't know I have them. She thinks they were burned. I secured them in her boarding house."

Tells of a Discovery.
Mrs. Squibb testified that she was living at the home of her sister, Mrs. Herman Groesbeck, in Clifton, when one of the detectives called her by telephone and told her her husband was in company with another woman.

"I ordered a taxicab, and Mr. Groesbeck, my colored maid, Annie, and myself went to the address the detective gave me. I discovered him there with another woman. I did not recognize her, then, but I learned later that she was Mrs. Triplette."

"I kept on knocking, it seemed for a half an hour, but it wasn't until I had been in there for some time that I noticed another door in the hall was open. A maid entered this door. I heard her moving furniture and I followed. I found her opening a double door to let my husband out of his room. I discovered him there with another woman. I did not recognize her, then, but I learned later that she was Mrs. Triplette."

"Love and Kisses" in Letters.
A large bundle of letters, among them those referred to by Mrs. Squibb as the letters written by her husband to Mrs. Triplette, which she secured to aid her husband, were introduced. Another bundle, which her attorney said were letters from women sending "love and kisses" were introduced.

Mrs. Squibb said that Mrs. Triplette had admitted to her that Squibb maintained a postoffice box under the name of Harry Grant. She said she had letters which her husband had written to young women, telling them that he expected to have a grand time in October, when she was to have left on a vacation trip.

The divorce was granted to Mrs. Squibb on a cross-petition to a divorce filed by Squibb. In his action Squibb had charged that his wife abandoned him last February. They were married in 1904. Mrs. Squibb is the daughter of Squire John Westel of Delhi.

AFTON BUSINESS HOUSES BURN IN $25,000 FIRE

Fire at Affton, St. Louis County, did about $25,000 damage early Saturday.

It was discovered about 4 o'clock in a feed store and spread rapidly. The buildings were occupied by a general store, a blacksmith shop, saloon, grocery and barber shop.

The fire wiped out most of the business of the town, which is located on the Gravois road, 10 miles from Clayton. It was discovered about 4 o'clock in a feed store and spread rapidly. The buildings were occupied by a general store, a blacksmith shop, saloon, grocery and barber shop.

In diplomatic circles the developments at Tampico were closely watched. Belief seemed general that any decision by the United States to prevent a blockade by Huerta would lead to complications and menace the success of mediation.

Constitutionalist representatives here today had received no word from Carranza indicating the reply he would make to the mediators and the answer was not expected for a day or two more.

VILLA FRIENDLY WITH CARRANZA

TORREON, Mexico, June 6.—The friendship between Gen. Carranza, chief of the revolutionists, and Gen. Villa, is firm as ever. Gen. Carranza has arrived in Torreon with his staff and his secretaries. Villa did not keep his appointment for a conference, remaining in Chihuahua, but his cooperation with Carranza is understood.

As a result came a public announcement by Villa that Gen. Carranza had a right to appoint whom he wished to whatever military or civil position he chose, and was justified in appointing Gen. Panfilo Natera chief of the division of the center. Villa further indicated that he would subordinate his own feelings to the good of the Constitutionalist cause by saying:

"I have always been ready to serve Carranza."

WINS $55,000 IN ALIMONY ON HER 'CHICKENS' STORY

Mrs. Alexander Squibb of Cincinnati Also Gets Attorney's Fees and Maiden Name.

ADVENTURE BY TAXICAB

Wife Tells of Surprising Husband and of Aiding Him When Another Woman Sues Him.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CINCINNATI, O., June 6.—Mrs. Alexander Squibb, who testified that, after overhearing a conversation about "a couple of chickens" she engaged detectives to obtain evidence against her husband, has just won a divorce, restoration of her maiden name, alimony in a lump sum of $55,000, payable at once, and her attorney's fees of $3000.

Squibb gave notice of appeal in the matter of alimony. Judge Cushing informed her that to file the appeal a bond of $10,000 would be required. Evidence had been introduced tending to show that Squibb was worth about $500,000.

A surprise of the hearing came when Mrs. Squibb said, after she had told in detail of finding her husband in company with Mrs. Ruth Triplette, she had done everything in her power to assist him in fighting a damage suit for $35,000 filed against Squibb by Mrs. Triplette and her sister.

Sorry for Her Husband.
In this connection she testified: "I really felt sorry for Mr. Squibb and I didn't like to think of his having all the unpleasant notoriety that the suit would bring. ## S. A. THOMPSON IS ACCUSED OF FALSE BANKRUPTCY OATH

Two Creditors Assert Late Banker's Son Knowingly and Fraudulently Hid Assets.

Charges that Samuel A. Thompson, son of the late William H. Thompson, former president of the National Bank of Commerce, had "knowingly and fraudulently concealed from his creditors, property belonging to his estate," and had "knowingly and fraudulently made false oath relating to his schedule contained all of his real and personal property," were filed in the United States District Court, Saturday, in connection with the Thompson bankruptcy proceedings.

The charges were entered by Attorney John M. Overall, representing the S. A. Thompson & Co. department store of New York City and Dr. J. Leland Boogher of St. Louis. Two petitions were filed, one for the New York firm and the other for Dr. Boogher.

It is stated in each petition that Thompson had "committed an offense punishable by imprisonment." The Altman company has a claim against Thompson for $10,000 and Dr. Boogher for $14,916.

Thompson took advantage of the bankruptcy law soon after his first wife made complaint that he had failed to pay alimony to her. It was shown in the bankruptcy proceedings that Thompson had an income of $20,000 a year from property held in trust for him, but his creditors were unable to get possession of the trust fund.

SILLIMAN TELLS OF THREE WEEKS IN A FILTHY PRISON

U. S. Vice-Consul, Arrested on Gen. Maas' Orders, Starved for 24 Hours and Forced to Sleep for Two Days on Stone Floor of Vermin-Infested Cell.

CALLED A SPY DAILY, TOLD HE'D BE SHOT

Wife Insulted and Jeered at While He Was Cursed, Villified and Put in 'Crooks' Lineup,' Says Letter From Maas Urged His Conviction.

NORFOLK, Va., June 6.—American Vice-Consul John R. Silliman's story of the hardships and indignities he suffered at the hands of Huerta's representatives when thrown into prison at Saltillo, tried as a spy and threatened with death, was told here by passengers with whom Silliman discussed his experiences when returning from Vera Cruz aboard the United States collier Jason.

Taken from his own home the evening of April 21, the day the American blue-jackets landed at Vera Cruz, Silliman was kept a prisoner in a dark room at the Federal Military headquarters until after midnight, then marched under guard to the Saltillo penitentiary and thrust into a vermin-infested cell. There he was a prisoner 21 days.

Without food for 24 hours.

For 24 hours following his incarceration the American Consul was without food. For nearly two days he was without a mattress to lie upon.

Worn and exhausted Silliman finally threw himself upon the stone floor of his cell, convinced that his life was had fallen upon dead ears, that he was to be shot at a spy, with no one to inform either his wife or the Government at Washington of his fate.

Through the intervention of the British Vice-Consul at Saltillo, Silliman was at length supplied with pillow and mattress. Then nondescript victuals were shoved under his cell door. Little by little his lot became easier. First the order that he be kept at dinner was lifted. Following this he was permitted a half hour's exercise a day. Toward the end of his confinement he was permitted to roam in the prison garden under guard.

At Mexico City the report of his trial as a spy was passed upon by Huerta's representatives, and seemingly without formality Silliman was given permission to start for Vera Cruz. The suggestion made to him then was that the quicker he got to Vera Cruz the better it would be for him.

Called to Maas' Headquarters.

According to the passengers of the Jason, Silliman had been warned that he and his wife were in danger and it was while he was at dinner discussing the situation with his wife, that he was arrested. A young Mexican lieutenant called, presented the compliments of Gen. Maas, and said that the General desired to see Silliman at his headquarters.

When he arrived at the military headquarters, Silliman, instead of being ushered into the presence of Gen. Maas, was led by the door of the General's office and along a corridor to a dark room into which he was thrust. When he attempted protest, a gruff-voiced Mexican in uniform advised him to keep his mouth shut.

After he had been in the unlighted room for several minutes the door was unlocked. Another Mexican officer, whom Silliman could not recognize, entered, carrying a lighted candle. He walked toward Silliman and held the candle so that Silliman could see his face. The light fell upon the Vice-Consul's face.

"You're a spy," growled the stranger. "A spy. Do you hear me? Do you know what we do to spies? Well, I guess you do and that's what's going to happen to you."

At intervals of a half hour or so during the remainder of the evening the same officer returned to the dark room and went through the same ceremony. Three Other Americans Arrested.

On every instance that he visited the cell, Silliman noticed that four armed guards stood outside the door. These guards he could see were chained about every 15 minutes. "Then I asked why this was done the Mexican officer bearing the candle sneeringly remarked that Gen. Maas put the soldiers there so that no one might molest."

The American Government's official spy? At about 11 o'clock three other Americans were forced into the room with Silliman. Like him all of them had been searched and relieved of jewelry, papers and money.

Afterward, however, when he had been a prisoner at the Federal penitentiary for several days, he learned that following his arrest the American consulate had been invaded by Huerta's troops.

Silliman in describing his cell to passengers on the Jason said that "the only seat and the only bed in it was the floor, and both were nightly cold, hard and filthy." All night Silliman paced about within the narrow confines of his cell, which he called a guard and detention cell.

SCHUMANN-HEINK DIVORCE
ENLIVENED BY LOVE NOTES

Nurse Tells How Mrs. Dean Kissed Letters She Said Were From "Billy"—Saw Her and Rapp, Defendant, Embrace and Sit on Each Other's Lap.

By Associated Press.
CHICAGO, June 6.—Letters teeming with words of affection and testimony concerning the close association between William Rapp Jr. and Mrs. Catherine E. Dean in her New York home were presented today in the hearing of the divorce suit of Madame Schumann-Heink against her husband, William Rapp Jr.

Miss Frances J. Ashton, an Auburn haired nurse who for five months lived in Mrs. Dean's apartments, was questioned and her close acquaintance with the doings of the crowded courtroom and apparently were of intense interest to the jury, who listened intently.

A letter identified by Miss Ashton as having been sent by Rapp to Mrs. Dean was introduced as evidence.

Some Letters Introduced.
"Dear Nonnie: This morning brought me a windfall—three letters from you and a postal card from Billy."

In her written testimony, Mrs. Elizabeth Heink, who said she had often seen Rapp at the Dean apartment, replied to a question, "Is Mrs. Dean fat or thin?" by saying: "Not so thin, just nice."

She also said that she had frequently seen Rapp "out, walking with Pluto, Mrs. Dean's dog."

Pluto, the dog, also appeared in the deposition of Lillian Schmidt, daughter of the Dean apartment owner, who told of being frequent visitor there, to take the dog out for exercise.

The girl testified that she saw Rapp
at the Dean apartment wearing an apron and fixing the stove. She declared that Mrs. Dean asked him to buy her meat and called him "honey."

"Once," said the girl, "Mrs. Dean showed me a letter from Mr. Rapp. She kissed the letter and let me read it. I don't remember what it said, but it ended 'Your faithful Billy.'"

HOUSE ASKS BAIRD
FOR OPINION ON
BUSCH FRANCHISE

City Counselor Again Requested to State Whether Rights Have Been Forfeited.

City Counselor Baird was directed by the House of Delegates Friday night to give an opinion by June 24 as to whether the Manufacturers' Railway (Busch) road, had forfeited $35,000 and its entire railroad right of way outside the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association grounds, to the city, by violating its franchise obligations.

Baird was asked for a similar opinion by the Council last September, but failed to transmit despite repeated requests from Councilman Fletcher, reporter of the original resolution.

Under the franchise of 1907, the Busch road agreed to build by April, 1910, a seven-mile belt railway in Illinois and a ferry system with inclines, to enable coal to be shipped into St. Louis. It was provided that unobtainable delays through litigation or other causes, might extend the time for completion of the road, but the Street Commissioner was to be notified each six months of any enforced delay. No such notice ever was filed with the city concerning the road in Illinois and no part of the road or the inclines were built as agreed upon.

The penalty for failure, stated in the franchise, was to be forfeiture of all tracks in Second street north of Lynch street, where the Anheuser-Busch grounds end, and forfeiture of $35,000
as liquidated damages.

A second obligation, to which the same penalty attached, was to build the tracks in Second street as far north as Poplar street, by April 1912, unless unavoidably delayed. Several injunction suits were filed by business houses north of Chouteau avenue, alleging that it would dam-

URORS INSPECT
ORIGINAL BALLOTS
IN MORRISEY CASE

Box Is Opened After Long Fight by Defense to Prevent Examination of Votes.

Circuit Attorney Harvey, in the trial of Daniel Morrissey, judge in the Second Precinct of the Fifth Ward in the election of November, 1912, charged with election frauds, Saturday placed before the jury all the ballots contained in the ballot box of that precinct in an effort to show that the ballots were not counted as cast for M. J. Gill and L. C.
Dyer, congressional candidates.

This is the first time that the ballot box has ever been opened in a contest in Missouri.

The testimony of only one witness was heard Saturday. Jacob Wehrle, living at Eureka, St. Louis County, said he resided at 418 Lucas avenue in November, 1912, and acted as Republican clerk at the polling place, 408 Morgan street.

Wehrle said two of the judges went to supper and that one who remained opened the ballot box and emptied it on the table, separating the ballots into Democratic and Republican.

Morrissey took up the Democratic ballots and called off the votes on that ticket for candidates to Wehrle, who had the tally sheet.

Wehrle said Morrissey called off 142 votes for each candidate and the Democratic ticket until he reached the Congressman, when he called 5 votes for Gill, Democratic candidate, and 137 votes for Dyer, Republican candidate. The witness said he did not see the ballots, but simply recorded the results as Morrissey called them off.

40 Republican Votes for Dyer.
The witness testified that Judge Stark, Republican, called off the Republican ballots. Stark named Lynch, who said there were 40 Republican votes for Congressman Dyer.

When the Second precinct was originally reported to the Board of Commissioners there were 139 votes for Dyer and 5 for Stark. The recounted ballots showed Gill got 73 votes and Dyer 166.

Circuit Judge Jones issued the order for opening the ballot box late Friday afternoon. The defense had made a long fight to prevent an examination of the ballots.

Attorneys Mortimer B. Levy and Thomas Rowe Jr., representing Morrissey, protested on the ground that the opening of the box would destroy the secrecy of the ballot, which is guaranteed by the Constitution, and because the box already had been opened before, and the contents of the box assured that the box contained the ballots in exactly the same condition as they were when counted by the judges.

Judge Jones overruled the objection, saying that the box should be opened by the Board of Election Commissioners, and that the ballots should be so arranged on boards that only the face of the ballots should be shown. Harvey explained that the number on the back of the ballot was not shown there would be no way to identify the voter of a particular ballot, and that if the voter could not be identified, there would be no violation of the secrecy of the ballot.

Attorneys said that this is the first time a ballot box has been opened in a criminal case in Missouri in many years.
The courts having held that boxes could be opened only in election contest cases.

Attorneys for Morrissey recently sought from the Supreme Court a restraining order to prevent Harvey from getting the ballot box into court, but the Supreme Court refused the order.

The indictment of Morrissey grows out of the Gill-Dyer contest evidence, which indicated, according to a report of a congressional investigating committee, that frauds had been committed in many precincts of the Twelfth Congressional District.

After Gill was nominated many Democrats who had supported him made a bitter fight against him, explaining that they had learned that he had opposed the late Senator Thomas E. Kinney when he was a candidate for Congress.

The Kinney-Egan faction was active in fighting Gill. Senator Michael Kinney and Thomas Egan are regular attorneys at the Morrissey trial, holding recent conferences with Morrissey and his attorneys.

Hungarian Who Killed Farmer
and His Wife Has 500
Cartridges and Rifle.

By Associated Press.
BUDAPEST, Hungary, June 6.—A mad murderer, August Tomcsak, had since yesterday morning, made an impregnable fortress out of the steeple of the village church at Hosiary. Armed with a repeating rifle and 500 cartridges, he took refuge in the steeple after killing a farmer and his wife and wounding their daughter.

Police tried to reach the criminal, but were repulsed with a fusillade which killed two and wounded 16 others.

A large force of police surrounded the church today, but their commander confessed he was helpless until Tomcsak decided to surrender voluntarily or used up his ammunition.

He fired 200 of his 500 cartridges yesterday, and besides wounding a large number of persons, destroyed the altar and pictures in the church.

This morning he shouted from the steeple: "It is a good thing you let me sleep during the night. Now I have fresh strength. When my last cartridge is gone, I will kill myself."

SUFFRAGETTES BURN
FINE ENGLISH MANSION

House Was Filled With Valuable Furniture and Objects of LONDON, June 6.—The campaign of the arson squads of the militant suffragettes was continued today, when the women destroyed by fire a fine mansion near High Wycombe in Buckinghamshire, about thirty miles from London. The mansion was filled with valuable furniture and objects of antique art. The usual suffrage literature was found about the grounds. The house adjoined the historic parish church.

This incendiary fire is considered part of the plan of the militant organization to give the people of England no rest until the parliamentary vote is granted to women.

Proper Thing Now Is to Peel Off Soiled Skin

Those who abhor sticky, greasy, shiny, streaked complexions should religiously avoid creams, powders and rouges during the heated days. There's no need for them, anyway, since the virtues of mercerized wax have become known. No amount of perspiration will produce any evidence that you've been using the wax.
As it is applied at bedtime and washed off in the morning, the complexion never looks like a make-up. Mercerized wax gradually takes off a bad complexion instead of adding anything to make it worse. It has none of the disadvantages of cosmetics and accomplishes much more in keeping the complexion beautifully white, satiny and youthful.
Just get an ounce of it at your druggists and use what a few days' treatment will do. Use like cold cream.
Another advantage of Mercerized wax heat tending to cause wrinkles and fish-lines—a skin-lightener that works by di-solving it or powdered azoaline in a bowl of water. Its use (as a face bath) leaves no trace.—ADV.

HELPS FIANCEE FURNISH A FLAT, THEN DISAPPEARS

Police Are Asked to Find Harry J. Sanders, a Maplewood Lodge Man.

MISSED WEDDING JUNE 2

Friends and Mother of Former Navy Man Say They Can Discover No Motive.

The police were asked Saturday to look for Harry J. Sanders of 204 Vine avenue, Maplewood, who was the last of the De Soto Lodge of Knights of Columbus, Maplewood, who disappeared May 24 on the eve of his wedding.

Sanders' fiancée, Miss Clara Pelstrup, 220 Montana avenue, was the last of his friends to see him so far as is known. They spent Sunday, May 24, sitting up the flat at 1707 North Union boulevard, St. Louis, where they were to live after their marriage, June 2.

After escorting Miss Pelstrup to her home, Sanders kissed her good-bye. He started for his own home about 11 p. m., according to the girl, and appeared to be in good spirits.

Motive for Departure a Mystery. According to Jerome A. Owens, past master of the De Soto Lodge, who reported the disappearance of the police, relatives and friends have made every effort to find him. None of them can assign any motive for an intentional departure.

There are several weeks' pay coming to him at the Scullin-Gallagher Steel Works at Benton, where he was employed, and his mother has $150, he had saved for his expenses. He had only a small sum of money when he disappeared, according to the mother.

Sanders was in the United States navy, serving on the battleship Maryland, until his discharge in August, 1913. Owens declares he has always been steady in his habits. He was not fond of society and never, so far as his friends know, spent much time in the company of any other girl than his fiancée.

One Clue Fails. Owens said that one clue that had promise of giving information about him had been examined but without result. Several days ago a parcel post package containing a tiny doll was delivered to Miss Pelstrup. The address "Mrs. Mary J. Sanders, 611 Cottage avenue," had been written on it and then scratched out.

There is no house at 611 Cottage avenue. Miss Pelstrup thinks the package was sent by a practical joker.

BOB FITZSIMMONS AND A WOMAN ARE INDICTED

Charge Results From Woman's Effort to Force Pupil to Educate Children.

NEW YORK, June 4.—Bob Fitzsimmons, former champion heavyweight pugilist of the world, was indicted yesterday by a grand jury in Middlesex County, New Jersey, for a crime known as the "German Countess," being named in the bill with him. It is charged that the two unlawfully lived together on May 11, and at other times, on "Fitzsimmons' farm at Denville, set far from New Brunswick.

The indictment was based on testimony given by Mrs. John Meek, wife of a former manager of the pugilist. Mrs. Meek furnished more evidence to obtain some sort of an order that would require Fitzsimmons to support and educate his children than anything else.

REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS

"The Pirate of Panama"

By William MacLeod Raine. (G. W. Dillingham Co.)

OWN HOUSE in Guernsey for the children attending a nearby school. Acting on this suggestion the Distinct Children's Dinner Society was established in London in 1886. Until 1905 the work taken up in many British cities, was a private charity. In that year Parliament, passing the "provision of meals act," authorized local school boards to install school restaurants as part of the regular school equipment. From these beginnings school feeding has been the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark and Bavaria. It is national in scope with support by the municipalities in Germany, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. In the United States, among the American cities which have provided school lunches are St. Louis, Denver, Washington, Chicago, Indianapolis, Boston, St. Paul, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Rochester, Cincinnati, Cleveland, New Orleans, Erie, McKeesport, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Memphis (in a night school), Houston, Milwaukee and Muskegon.

Minnesota is the first State in which the plan has been adopted by rural schools, several of which are equipped to serve warm midday lunches to children coming long distances, in place of the cold lunches they formerly brought from home. No American state has yet enacted legislation on the subject, but a bill has been favorably reported in the legislature of the Massachusetts Legislature authorizing cities and towns to provide meals at cost for school children. The author predicts that within two years school lunches will be established parts of the elementary school systems of at least 100 American cities.

United States Commissioner of Education, in his introduction to the book, explains the movement's rapid advance in this country, saying: "In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten breakfast as early as 5 or 6 o'clock and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. These children should have a light, wholesome luncheon in the middle of the forenoon. For many there is nothing to eat at home if they return there at the noon hour. Many find food at home at the noon hour and it is cold and must eat it alone. Father and mother and the children are in the shops of the day. The purpose of the system is to enable underfed or badly fed children to get better results from the schooling by doing the work with contented minds. It is a simple, practical, and cheap, an additional investment of public funds in the educational plant created to train the young for orderly and useful citizenship. (Lippincott's).

NEW ARNOLD BENNETT NOVEL. It takes Arnold Bennett as long as it ever did to tell how a housemaid lights the gas, or how a charwoman performs her task. But his long descriptions, some of them charming and some merely fatiguing, form a smaller part of "The Price of Love" than of most of his novels. Wherefore, as Bennett usually has something worth while when the reader gets to it, it may be said that this book shows him at his best. It is a story of crime without being a detective story, and a story of woman's love without being in the ordinary sense a love story.

Everyone who reads newspaper accounts of the discovery and punishment of defaulters must have been impressed with the sheer accidents by which exposure in such cases usually comes, and must have reflected on the number of defaulters who escape detection, or at least escape punishment. This is not a safe subject for the unskilled writer to toy with, but Bennett has handled it in a way free from objection.

Louis Fore, as pictured in this book, was a dishonest young man, who stole from his employer. He was vain and selfish, but not wholly heartless. He was handsome, he smoked a cigarette gracefully, and he talked well. She loved him, and the strange disappearance of some 300 pounds sterling from the home of his aunt, Mrs. Maiden, where Rachel was employed, during his visit there, did not seem to her a reason for hesitating about marrying him.

Here is the summing-up of Rachel's attitude when she learns the worst about her husband: "If he had faults—and he had—she preferred them (proudly and passionately) to the faults of other women's husbands. He was not a brute, not even a boor or a savage—thousands of savages ranged free and terror-stricken in the Five Towns. Even when vexed and furious, he could control himself. It was possible to share his daily life and see him in all his social moods without being humiliated. He was not a cloisterer; watch him from the bow window of a morning as he walked down the street! He did not drink; he was not a beast. He was not mean. He might scatter money, but he was not mean. In fact, except that one sinister streak in his nature, she could detect no fault. There was danger in that streak. Well, there was danger in every man. She would accept it. She would watch it."

The story is not the least interesting because its chief characters are a clerk, dependent on his salary of £3 a week, and a girl employed in domestic service. For such literary purposes as it takes to set forth the plain truth, which is that such persons may be as cultured, and their affairs as complex, as those of heirs to great fortunes, Bennett deserves commendation. (Harper's).

BOB FITZSIMMONS AND A WOMAN ARE INDICTED

Charge Results From Woman's Effort to Force Pupil to Educate Children.

NEW YORK, June 4.—Bob Fitzsimmons, former champion heavyweight pugilist of the world, was indicted yesterday by a grand jury in Middlesex County, New Jersey, for a crime known as the "German Countess," being named in the bill with him. It is charged that the two unlawfully lived together on May 11, and at other times, on "Fitzsimmons' farm at Denville, set far from New Brunswick.

The indictment was based on testimony given by Mrs. John Meek, wife of a former manager of the pugilist. Mrs. Meek furnished more evidence to obtain some sort of an order that would require Fitzsimmons to support and educate his children than anything else.

OWN HOUSE in Guernsey for the children attending a nearby school. Acting on this suggestion the Distinct Children's Dinner Society was established in London in 1886. Until 1905 the work taken up in many British cities, was a private charity. In that year Parliament, passing the "provision of meals act," authorized local school boards to install school restaurants as part of the regular school equipment. From these beginnings school feeding has been the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark and Bavaria. It is national in scope with support by the municipalities in Germany, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. In the United States, among the American cities which have provided school lunches are St. Louis, Denver, Washington, Chicago, Indianapolis, Boston, St. Paul, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Rochester, Cincinnati, Cleveland, New Orleans, Erie, McKeesport, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Memphis (in a night school), Houston, Milwaukee and Muskegon.

Minnesota is the first State in which the plan has been adopted by rural schools, several of which are equipped to serve warm midday lunches to children coming long distances, in place of the cold lunches they formerly brought from home. No American state has yet enacted legislation on the subject, but a bill has been favorably reported in the legislature of the Massachusetts Legislature authorizing cities and towns to provide meals at cost for school children. The author predicts that within two years school lunches will be established parts of the elementary school systems of at least 100 American cities.

United States Commissioner of Education, in his introduction to the book, explains the movement's rapid advance in this country, saying: "In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten breakfast as early as 5 or 6 o'clock and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. These children should have a light, wholesome luncheon in the middle of the forenoon. For many there is nothing to eat at home if they return there at the noon hour. Many find food at home at the noon hour and it is cold and must eat it alone. Father and mother and the children are in the shops of the day. The purpose of the system is to enable underfed or badly fed children to get better results from the schooling by doing the work with contented minds. It is a simple, practical, and cheap, an additional investment of public funds in the educational plant created to train the young for orderly and useful citizenship. (Lippincott's).

NEW ARNOLD BENNETT NOVEL. It takes Arnold Bennett as long as it ever did to tell how a housemaid lights the gas, or how a charwoman performs her task. But his long descriptions, some of them charming and some merely fatiguing, form a smaller part of "The Price of Love" than of most of his novels. Wherefore, as Bennett usually has something worth while when the reader gets to it, it may be said that this book shows him at his best. ## MARSANS IS HERE CONFERRING WITH ST. LOUIS "FEDS"

Cuban Outfielder of the Cincinnati Reds Brought to St. Louis by Local Attorney.

ARMANDO MARSANS, the Cuban baseball player, who has proven a thorn in the side of Manager Charley Herzog of Cincinnati ever since the season opened, and who now is on his second "strike" of the season against the hardheaded leadership of the Reds' boss, is in St. Louis today.

He was brought here Friday night by Attorney Dwight Currie of St. Louis and kept under close watch while conferences with the local officers of the "Feds" could be had.

President E. A. Stange, Currie and Paul de C. Hall held conferences during the morning, but at noon the St. Louis officials had nothing to give out about the signing of Marsans.

Marsans went on his second strike three days ago. He gave the Cincinnati management 10 days' notice that he would not play for the club any longer. This followed a benching by Manager Herzog.

It is believed Marsans acted under legal advice in giving a time notice equivalent to that which would have been given him as a player, under his contract, in case the club had decided to drop him.

Marsans himself was seen regarding his proposed "jump" to the Federal League.

Matty's Control Makes Him Best Pitcher in N. L.

Cheney's Record Shows Fewer Hits and Runs Per Game, but Cub Star Is Wild.

Christy Mathewson, McGraw's sturdy pennant prop, still is king of the National League pitchers, even though he is hit harder than any other hurler in the parent body.

For this season Matty has won eight out of ten games, one of his defeats being at the hands of the Cardinals. Matty has pitched in 81 innings and been found for 80 hits and 32 runs.

In contrast, Larry Cheney has pitched in 124 innings, won five and lost three and allowed only 54 hits and only four runs in 46 more innings against the same number of runs off his arm.

But here's the reason why the Giant star has not won so many games: Cheney has been hit by 11 home runs, 11 off Cheney, 52. Just about 6 to 1, Cheney has made seven wild pitches against none for Matty. The latest National League figures:

attention as the days go by and the weather runs into months. There has been six million tons of coal already taken out of the eastern markets by the close of Ohio's mining season. "If the weather continues to be what it is now, there is no present sign, be assured, so many days would elapse before regular operations would be resumed that Ohio's shortage might be a year's supply," says one of the Westerners. "The prospect that the trouble will continue well into the summer the shortage, actual and prospective, is interesting coal men in places not now directly concerned and companies not now directly interested in adding to the future glut of the market."

S'Matter Pop?

Nothing About This Indian to Suggest Pants!

Drawn for the Post-Dispatch
By C. M. PAYNE.

The Jarr Family

Rescued Turns Rescuer and Saves Mr. Jarr.

Written for the Post-Dispatch
By ROY MCCARDELL.

MR. JARR assumed a "come one, come all" attitude and expression as Fritz, the shipping clerk, and Sweeney, the cop, the latter frothing with rage, crawled out from under the folding bed. This, now released from its fair burden, the hysterical fat lady, was no longer a deadfall for the two men beneath it, a barricade for the moving picture operator, nor a deadfall sideways for the unfortunate little bald bachelor boarder, Malachi.

"This buttinsky put up the job on me!" roared Sweeney, the policeman. "He's a reformer! I kin tell it by the way he looks! And it's them reformers that always gits you in bad! Why, didn't everybody think he was the Board of Health? Sure dey did!"

Mr. Jarr was ready for his martyrdom. It flashed through his mind that if he escaped being bruised or maimed he would not be able to go back home and say to his wife: "I told you so!" Hence he never stirred as the raging policeman, the most formidable of all ferocious animals, advanced toward him. "Hey, Rubel!" cried the fat lady, coming suddenly to the rescue. "Whatcha mean wanting to beat up a gemman! You fat head! If you wanna smear anybody, go outside and smear them sumps what's blocking the entrance like yep tightwad what stick around for the free attractions and the ballyhoo, and then grin when the door talkers start to grind 'em in! Q'wan, yab big stew! Or I'll fall on you and smear you flat, myself!"

This unlooked for championship disconcerted the irate policeman. "Well, maybe this lady saves you now," he grumbled, "but if you ever shows in this precinct after this one time you'll get yours, and you'll get it good! I'll bank you on the noodle till you drop and then put a gat in your kick and frame you up for five in stir for carrying concealed weapons."

"You'll apologise to a party of class that has no use for bulls, except to serve on the juries that send 'em up," interposed the fat lady. "If I have swell friends what call to see me when I'm visiting poor relations on the East Side, no one aint' going to bawl them out!"

"Don't start anything with her, Sweeney," advised her brother Fritz. "all I want her to do is to ask for her time and pull her freight out of here! I treat her as if I was her own brother, which I am." Fritz went on in a grumbled tone. "And what does she do but put everything on the blink. There's Charlie Peters"—and Fritz indicated the moving picture operator, who, now that the bed was up, had opened his door and come out—"there's Charlie Peters, what has lost his job at the Palace Dream Nickelodeon!"

"Are you in the movies?" asked La Belle Rotundi, appealing to the dapper, shallow youth, who subsisted almost exclusively on homemade cigarettes.

"I work a projector," replied the youth. "But I never was on a camera. But if you kin run a secondhand projecting machine of a type first used to show the authentic films of the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight I'll bet you can run a camera, outside work or studio, and never bat an eye!" And to prove it Mr. Peters rolled another cigarette.

"I am jest crazy to work in the movies!" exclaimed La Belle Rotundi. "You know, as I lay there in bed thinking it over, I realized that being a fat lady was working at a lost art."

"Well, all I gotta say is that I want I was on a peg post rather than being on beat in this district, then maybe I wouldn't have got me uniform tore and me back strained," grumbled Sweeney, the policeman.

"And look at poor Malachi!" cried Fritz. "Boarding with us eight years, and having no hay pile to back into for three nights!"

"It's all right, Fritz," mumbled the little oiler. "It's all right now. I walked in me sleep while your sister tuck me place in the haypile, but that's done for since she nearly bruck me fut!"

"Well, good-night, everybody!" said Mr. Jarr, as he consulted his watch. "The next time you have a sociable riot again, don't forget to invite me in time for"—and he bowed to the fat lady—"the big blow off!"

"And look at poor Malachi!" cried Fritz. "Boarding with us eight years, and having no hay pile to back into for three nights!"

Millby's Self—An Allegory.

Such Is Life

Drawn for the Post-Dispatch
By MAURICE KETTEN.

MILBY walked slowly and somewhat thoughtfully up the stairs until he came to his apartment. He opened the window and let in the warm June air, and then, turning back into the semi-gloom, he faced suddenly—himself.

"Sit down," said Millby. "I am glad you came. I was thinking about you. I shan't need you any longer."

Millby's Self looked at him with, perhaps, a suggestion of cynicism.

"Yes, I know," he replied. "I have been expecting this. You get married tomorrow noon, I believe?"

Millby's voice became apologetic.

"Yes," he said, "tomorrow noon. You see, old fellow," he went on, "you are no longer necessary to me. She has come to me, and my identity is going to be swallowed up in my love for her. I shall work for her. I shall lose myself for her pleasure, for her happiness. I shan't be lonesome any longer, and I shan't need anyone to guide me. She is a particularly nice girl, and she is going to watch over me and take care of me. My time will be completely filled up, and, of course, you will naturally be superfluous."

Millby's Self changed his position slightly, looking at his feet up on the table—a habit of his when he was with Millby. He was a studious person, was this Self, in the habit of reflecting before he spoke, and so there was a considerable silence. Finally he said:

"You wish me to go permanently?"

"Well, that was the idea," said Millby, with a trace of uneasiness in his voice. "You see, this affair between her and me is quite permanent; it is forever, don't you know?"

"I have not had too much experience with other people," said the Self, "but I know you, and you have done considerable reading together and some talking together. We have been around quite a bit and I have, somehow, gathered the distinct impression that even the most ardent love affair is not always so permanent as it seems. You see, old man, while at times you have treated me like a dog and have tried by patience to the limit, still I don't like the 'idea of throwing you over this precipitate manner."

Millby smiled reassuringly.

"You are not throwing me over," he said. "I am throwing you over."

"Yes, but it amounts to the same thing. Whenever you are especially foolish it is my business to restrain you. I don't mind giving up this job for the present; in fact, when I heard that you were going to get married, I knew that my time was coming. I am an active person, and it is really quite impossible and much too wearing for me to sit around and watch you two people spoon, especially when you ignore me so utterly. Playing the gooseberry is not exactly my forte. Besides, you have been working me pretty hard during all these bachelor days of yours, and I don't mind taking a couple of years off. You will, naturally, give up these apartments but that doesn't matter; I can lounge around in the alcoves for about that length of time without inconvenience to anyone. But!"

And here he paused impressively.

"I shall come back to you at the end of two years."

Millby looked at himself with just a trace of a sneer.

"That's all right," he said, "but you don't quite understand. This affair of mine is different from all other affairs. I am really in love; I have tested her. She is the real thing. This is not going to be a short matter. You may think that I don't know what I am talking about, but I assure you I do. It is all day with me—and with her. It is a permanent thing—until death do us part. Don't you smile! Some marriages are made in heaven, and this is one of them. She is the dearest, sweetest, loveliest!"

"Hold on there a minute," said Millby's Self. "You must remember that I have been listening to this sort of talk for some little time. Please don't go over the catalogue of her virtues again. I know it all by heart. Nevertheless, old man, I shall come around in a couple of years. Time will tell. I know you better than you know—well, myself, for instance. So long. Expect me on an evening in June two years from date."

Millby looked up. He started to reply, but his Self had disappeared. Only the solemn prenuptial June shadows deepened on the opposite wall. He was alone.

II.

It was two years later. Millby, entering his solitary room, threw himself in his chair and opened up a rather long legal looking document, illuminated with a red seal. As he was about to glance over it, the door suddenly opened and—his Self once more stood before him.

"Hello!" exclaimed Millby. "So you have come back, have you?"

"Yes, I have come back. I read the news of your divorce in this morning's papers. What do you think of me as a prophet?"

"Now, look here. You didn't prophesy anything."

"Didn't I? The mere fact that I said I would come back in two years was a prophecy in itself. You know, old man, you were a little bit conceited about that love affair of yours. You thought it was different. You thought that the sweetest, loveliest, dearest, etc., girl in all the world was going to be a permanent feature. Ha! Like all the rest of mankind, you were mistaken, and so I have come back to take you up again where I dropped you—or rather where you dropped me. I suppose the decree has been granted and you are entirely free?"

"Oh, yes," said Millby, rather indifferently.

"Then we will consider it settled. My vacation over, refreshed in spirit, and ready for business, I shall resume my old relationship as your companion and guide."

Millby went over to the door and opened it.

"No, thank you, old chap," he said. "I will not need you. I have made other arrangements. You no longer interest me. The sweetest, dearest, loveliest!"

"Do you mean?" said his Self got up. He saw it was all over.

"Precisely. Tomorrow I am to be married once more to the dearest, sweetest, loveliest!"

But the Self had gone.—T. L. M., in Life.

He Deserved Better.

M. R. GREEN, said the college professor, "demonstrate for me that x equals zero."

"Certainly, sir. I write home for an x and get a zero."

"And you'll also get a zero here."

Doesn't Wait.

WHEN your husband has been at the club does he lie in bed the next morning?"

"No, he does it as soon as he gets home that night."

Stories St. Louisans Tell

WHEN LOEB WAS ON THE ROAD.

ONCE upon a time, before Edward A. Loeb was made manager of one of the departments of the J. S. Wolff Clothing Co., he was a drummer, the major part, and the hardest part (he doesn't) of his territory being in Arkansas.

"You know," said Loeb the other day, "in many of these small towns in Arkansas where the hotel to both the stopping places for the drummers and the eating place for many of the natives as well, it is customary to ring the dinner bell twice before meals. The first, as all good drummers know, gives notice to prepare for the dining room—that is, notices all about to tackle the bill of fare that it's time to wash up. At the second bell the doors are thrown open and drummers and natives troop in. In the larger towns, of course, only one bell is sounded. This difference is often perplexing to the stranger."

"Sitting with a crowd of drummers waiting for supper one hot afternoon, just before I left the road, the darkey man-of-all-work shambled out on the porch and began ringing a bell almost as big as the ones carried by locomotives. When the racket ceased, I turned and said:

"Porter, do you ring two bells for supper?"

Evidently it was his first afternoon on the job for he stopped mystified, looked at me, then at the bell, back over his shoulder toward the door, and then at the bell and at me, again.

"Two bells or one bell?" I queried stronger.

With this his face lit up childlike and he answered:

"No, sah, no, sah, boss! Jes' de one. Tain't necessary, 'Tee Jes' to ring dissen byan, twice!"
